WEATHER. Western Oregon and Washington—Occasional rain.

THE SUPREME THING.

The effort now being made by J. N. Teal at Washington for a joint appropriation for the Cello canal and the Columbia river bar is a blunder, a huge and unforgivable blunder; and will result either in the defeat of both projects or so meagre an allotment for the joint objects as will amount to the same thing.

Col. W. S. Roessler has openly and plainly declared for the single and final appropriation for the bar, alone, in contravention of all government aid, for the time being for any other enterprise in the state; the Oregonian, speaking for the state, has made the same plain and honest declaration.

It is raw folly for Teal, or any other representative citizen, to seek to use the one essential need of the whole state as a lever for extracting Congressional aid for a scheme that is admittedly a Portland venture, and harness his plea to the leading and most imperative requirement of the whole state. Every influence in Oregon should be exerted to excluding this man and his specious plea from the path and source of the aid so essential to the supreme need of Oregon.

His attitude and argument before Congress in this mission, must, sooner or later, assume a "dog in the manger" phase, whereupon Congress will disgustedly deny both pleas or grant so meagre an answer to each as to utterly minify and disparage both.

For the sake of achieving the one cardinal commercial necessity of the whole Columbia basin, the Cello canal should be instantly and completely dropped from sight and consideration and so kept until the last and amplest provision is made for the completion of the great sea-channel that shall make the Cello canal and all other subsidiary elements of Oregon commerce, necessary, and practicable.

Aside from the immense commercial value inherent in the early completion of the bar project, the government must soon look to its strategic utility and provide depths thereon that will give refuge to the navies of the nation in the event of war. It is the second great harbor on the Pacific that shall be relied upon in the event of hostilities and the channels leading to it must be cleared and deepened and widened until no question shall remain of its instant efficacy for all naval purposes. This, of itself, should be enough to warrant Congress in doing all that can be done for the Columbia river bar. As things stand now the United States has but one great coast depot for naval resort and equipment on the Pacific, San Francisco. San Diego bay is too small and unprotected, naturally, to afford a base and asylum for refuge, equipment and establishment in a naval campaign; Puget Sound lies behind hundreds of miles of coast flanked by a foreign government, allied, under given conditions, against us, in the prosecution of a trans-Pacific war, and the Bremerton Yard would be practically useless in so grave an emergency.

The Columbia river and its undisturbed national predilection, wholly in touch with every atom of national resource, would become, aside from San Francisco, the only place on wholly

American soil, amenable to the extraordinary demands of the government at such a juncture; and if this were the sole reason for the granting of an immediate and adequate appropriation for securing and maintaining channels across its bar, it would be enough; but taking the two potent reasons, an amplified commerce, and the national security, the question becomes vast enough to invite the best and wisest disposition of Congress; and to attain to this, the hampering and illogical issues, such as the Cello canal, should be promptly relegated to the rear.

The day may come, all too soon, when the government shall deplore the wretched blunders of the past in this relation, and to commit another now would be deliberately suicidal. The Columbia river bar is first and pre-eminent among the crying needs of the country. All else can wait indefinitely.

FOR ASTORIA'S SAKE!

The Morning Astorian makes its final plea, in the name of good government, and in behalf of the whole people of the municipality, for the defeat of the amendment to section No. 143 of the present charter, which takes the Astoria Water Commission from its present safe and wholesome exclusion, only to plunge it into the political turmoil and uproar incident to an elective establishment. It is the one element of city business utterly free from the snarl and confusion and reproach of the political regimen and there is no earthly reason to hand it over to the spottlemen and degrade it to the level of a "gang nursery" for the exploitation of drafters and the use of the bosses as a means of paying campaign debts, and other choice obligations. Vote "No" when you come to it, and save the one institution unassociated with the nastiness of current politics; by doing this you will do yourself and your city and your children, a plain and down-right favor, and keep one big department of your local business clean, and free from the contempt and disfavor inseparable from the cult. Save the water commission, now; and congratulate yourself for all time to come!

Vote early, because the scanning of the long ticket requires time. Don't wait an hour after the polls are open!

A Poem for Today

VENICE

By John Hay

LOVE, in the summer night do you recall, Midnight, and Venice, and those skies of June, Thick strewn with stars, when from the still lagoon We gazed noiseless to the dim canal? A sense of some forgotten festival Hung over us, and our own hearts beat in tune With passionate memories, which the young moon Lit up on dome and tower and palace wall. We dreamed what ghosts of bygone love made part Of that still night and trembling, amorous air, I saw in those rich beams that kissed your hair, Those breezes warm with bygone lovers' sighs, All the old beauties of Venice in your eyes. All the dead loves of Venice in my heart.

to endanger life of either or render cohabitation unsafe, willful desertion for two years, habitual drunkenness for a like period, and hopeless insanity of the husband.

'Tis estimated that there are about 50,000 different secret proprietary compounds, medicines, "foods," liquor "cures," complexion dopes and so forth, upon the American market. How many will there be when the new law compels the manufacturers to put on the label the amount of alcohol or dangerous drugs contained in each preparation? The American people will surely get their eyes open to the great evils that have been hiding behind some innocent-looking remedies!

MAYBE THIS IS IT

YOU WILL HAVE TO ADMIT THAT HIS PIANO IS A SNAP, EVEN IF YOU DON'T PURCHASE IT—IT'S A BAILEY AT $60 LESS THAN IT SHOULD BE.

We won't urge you to buy this one, or any other one, for that matter.

We believe purchasers should use their best judgment and they will then stay satisfied with their piano. We also advise intending buyers to get as many facts as possible concerning their piano at the start, so no uncomfortable feeling will ever come later that they did not act wisely. A customer, even if mildly dissatisfied with the piano they own, is a very poor advertisement for the firm that sold it.

The cause of much lack of satisfaction among piano users is that they did not rely enough on the knowledge and judgment of the man or firm they purchased it of.

We are not mind readers, but if we know what not to do in order to exactly please you, we certainly will not do it.

A splendid stock to choose from, open evenings.
